Buonanotte Garibaldi could be Rome's best-kept secret. Nestled behind ivy-clad walls in arty Trastevere – all narrow cobbled streets and medieval houses – this gorgeous guest house is the home and studio of artist and textile designer Luisa Longo whose graceful fabrics pretty-up the walls and furniture throughout. (If you like what you see, there are workshops at which you can learn Longo's craft.) This urban oasis, built around a fragrant courtyard strewn with orange and palm trees, is the stuff of boho-luxe fantasies. The three rooms (yes, just three boutique chic retreats) are sprinkled with 19th and 20th-century antiques while drapes, throws and upholstery carrying Longo's distinctive prints add character and verve. The first-floor Rome Room combines a warm sunset palette with a huge terrace overlooking the courtyard (talk about romantic) while luxurious bathrooms and big, sink-into beds are the standout features of the Chocolate and Orange Rooms; both open onto the sun-drenched patio. Days begin in fine style with a breakfast of homemade pastries, tarts and jams served in the elegant white dining room while the shaded courtyard is a welcome respite from the blazing afternoon sun. Garibaldi is the ultimate intimate, bohemian bolthole.
